The Blackburns

Lucie and Thornton Blackburn founded the first taxi company in Toronto in the 1830s. Their successful business enterprise was all the more notable in that the Blackburns were also involved in a number of other “firsts”. The Blackburn’s inspiring story included sparking the first racial uprising in Detroit history and the first serious legal dispute between Canada and the United States regarding the Underground Railroad.

In 1831 Lucie and Thornton Blackburn made a daring escape from slave markets in Louisville, Kentucky. They fled north only to be discovered by slave catchers in Michigan, and were destined to be returned to slavery in Kentucky until the local black community in Detroit rallied to their cause sparking the Blackburn Riots of 1833.

Escaping custody, the couple fled to freedom in Canada. In June 1833, Michigan's governor demanded their extradition. An impassioned and successful defence of the Blackburns by Upper Canada's Lieutenant Governor set precedents for future fugitive slave cases in Canada.

The tale of the Blackburns was lost to history until a chance archaeological discovery in a downtown Toronto school yard again brought the story of Lucie and Thornton Blackburn to light. Their story is recorded in "I've Got A Home In Glory Land", a Governor General's Award winning book written by Karolyn Smardz Frost. As noted in the book, Fasken Martineau acted as legal counsel to the Blackburns.
