Serving Customers with Intellectual or Developmental, Learning or Mental Health Disabilities

Serving Customers Who Have Intellectual, Developmental or Learning Disabilities over the Phone

“Customer” refers to a person seeking or receiving a service

- Speak normally, clearly and directly.
- Concentrate on what’s being said
- Be patient, don’t interrupt and don’t finish your customer’s sentences
- Don’t try to guess what your customer is saying. If you don’t understand, don’t pretend. Just ask again
- If you’re not certain what was said, just repeat or rephrase what you’ve heard
- If a telephone customer is using an interpreter, just speak normally to the customer, not to the interpreter
- If your customer is having difficulty communicating, make arrangements to call back when it’s convenient to speak with someone else

Serving Customers with Intellectual or Developmental Disabilities

People with intellectual or developmental disabilities may have difficulty doing many things most of us take for granted. These disabilities can mildly or profoundly limit one’s ability to learn, communicate, do everyday activities, and live independently. You may not be able to know that someone has this disability unless you are told, or you notice the way people act, ask questions or use body language. As much as possible, treat your customers with intellectual or developmental disabilities like anyone else. They may understand more than you think, and they will appreciate you treating them with respect.

- Speak directly to your customer, not to their companion or attendant
- Use plain language
- Speak in short sentences
- Take your time, be patient
- If you can’t understand what’s being said, don’t pretend. Just ask again
- Ask “Do you understand?” after giving information
- Provide one piece of information at a time – step-by-step instructions
- Offer information in simpler concepts

Serving Customers with Mental Health Disabilities

People with mental health disabilities look like anyone else. You may not know that your customer has a mental health disability unless informed. Usually it will not affect your customer service at all. But if someone is experiencing difficulty in controlling their symptoms or is in a crisis, you may need to help out. Be calm and professional and let your customer tell you how you can best help.
